

Women And The True Loves Of Their Lives ... Hey Guys, Do You Really Think It's You?

Photos & Thoughts By Rudy Brueggemann, May 2009

My best friends are women. I love them. I always have and know I always will. Still, I will always play second fiddle to their hearts. Over the years, I have learned that most women want something that the men in their lives cannot provide, at least among the women I know, especially as friends. Many women want unconditional, passionate, heart-felt love. This is true even for my happily married women friends. It is the kind of love that is just about impossible to find in the complicated world of human relationships, and especially from many men, even the good ones. Not so in the canine world. Dog love is that warm lick in the early morning, the tail wag after a hard day of work, the goofy and affectionate gestures of absolutely blind affection. Dog love is profound. Dog love is scary intense. Dog love is psychic and true. Hey guys, have you been paying attention? It is an unfair playing field, and the odds are stacked against you. Render unto Caesar and get in line with the dogs. You might just learn a few tricks and win their hearts in the end.
